PREFACE.

THE General Index to the first thirty volumes of the JOURNAL of the British Archaeological Association has been found to be so useful to students and lovers of Antiquarian and Mediaeval remains, that this present volume in continuation of it needs no apology for its preparation and publication by the Association.

After a lapse of twelve years since the General Index was published, twelve new annual volumes have been added to the JOURNAL of the Association, and the General Index which follows has been prepared for them in the same manner as the former volume containing the Index of the earlier issue of the JOURNAL. To this have been added references to the COLLECTANEA ARCHAEOLOGICA, vols. i and ii (all published), and the two volumes containing the Transactions at the Second Annual Congress, held at Winchester, August 1845, and the Third Congress, held at Gloucester, August 1846. These are two extra or special volumes, and have no separate indices printed with them. The references, and their contents, which have been incorporated with the other indices of the JOURNAL, will therefore be, for the first time, available to the members of the Association.

As in former cases, each Annual Congress has drawn the bias of feeling for the Publication of the following year towards the particular centre wherein the Congress was held, and, consequently, a great proportion of the volumes will be found to contain matter relating more or less intimately to the immediate locality of the previous Congress. Hence, those who look for general information upon prominent local antiquities will do well to consult the volumes of the ensuing year, according to the city or county wherein the Congress took place. But in addition to these local volumes there are many papers, which were either read at the Congresses or suggested to the authors by occasion of the Congresses, that throw light upon the archæology of the neighbourhood, and it is only by the aid of such indexes as the two now published by the Association that rapid reference may be made to the contents of what is now a very large collection of material for the elucidation of ancient British history.

These meetings have now been held in the following course of time and place:—

Date.	Place of Congress.	No. of Vol.	Date.	Place of Congress.	No. of Vol.

The Map of Localities at which the Congresses have been held has been carried up to the last meeting at Darlington.

With regard to the arrangement of the earlier volumes, difficulty is occasionally found, owing to the irregularity of date and lettering on some of them. The following Table has, however, been prepared to set this point at rest.
